Market Review

US bonds continued to experience price declines in October as interest rates remained on an upward trajectory. Although the year-over-year US inflation rate continued to trend lower during the month, its retreat has been slower than anticipated. As a result, the US Federal Reserve Board (Fed) is expected to raise short-term interest rates aggressively in early November, with another rate hike likely before the end of the year. On the economic front, the US economy grew at an annualised rate of 2.6% in the third quarter, outpacing expectations after two consecutive quarters of contraction. Energy exports and consumer spending led the economy's advance, offsetting a continued decline in the housing market as mortgage rates hit their highest levels in two decades.

US bond yields rose across the board in October, reflecting the inflationary environment and Fed rate hike expectations. On a sector basis, US Treasury securities and residential mortgage-backed securities declined the most, whilst high-yield corporate bonds posted positive returns for the month, benefiting from the positive economic news and improving corporate earnings.

Outlook

The Fed continues its path to tighten monetary policy in 2022 in light of strong economic data in the US. The full impact of the tightening started early this year is only beginning to flow through the real economy as it can take up to 18 months before evidence of impact is observed. Consumers and businesses in the US are beginning to feel this tightening. The impact to earnings and balance sheets is uneven, but it is there and broadening out.

Credit metrics supported by strong earnings and low leverage were very healthy for most businesses at the beginning of the year. Earnings deterioration is beginning to put pressure on companies as demand for goods wanes and inflationary pressures impact margins. Most higher quality corporates should be able to withstand softening economic conditions. Companies of lower credit quality will have to carefully navigate worsening conditions compounded by increased required rates of return by the financial markets.

We maintain our favourable view of preferred securities as significantly improved yields should lead to attractive forward returns. Ability to select securities from a broader credit universe and across the capital structure will help navigate the softening landscape and focus on risk-adjusted returns. There is potential for incremental upside in addition to income as inflation, volatility and uncertainty subside medium-term. Preferreds continue to offer value compared to higher duration and traditional investment grade fixed income. We continue our defensive position stance from 2019, with overweight allocations in areas such as utilities and underweight allocations in retail fixed-coupon securities.

The Fund mentioned in this document is specific to variable life insurance contracts and is not considered a mutual fund. Yields depend on interest and foreign exchange rate levels, both of which may fluctuate. Other factors that affect yield include changes in the credit standing of the issuers and changes in the value of the stocks and dividends received. Further, investments of the Fund may provide that their values be determined based on prices or yields of other securities, instruments or foreign currencies, and such provisions may result in negative fluctuations in the value of these investments and, in turn, the Fund's yields. Thus, the performance of the separate account(s) is not guaranteed and the value of the policy could be less than the capital invested. THE VARIABLE LIFE POLICYHOLDER SHALL BEAR ALL INVESTMENT RISKS. Past performance of the Fund is not necessarily indicative of future performance. Yields are not guaranteed.
