Market Review

The Philippine Stock Exchange Index was up by 1% to close at 6,774.68 points in May. The market started weak in the early part of May as concerns over global economic slowdown and uncertainties over the economic direction from the new administration dragged the market lower. However the market started to rally as the incoming administration's economic team started to take shape.

Economic recovery remains underway as evidenced by the strong corporate earnings in the first quarter. Earnings sequentially rose 14%, indicating a sustained return to pre pandemic profitability. Consumer discretionary and mall operators reported strong topline growth as they are the main beneficiaries on the reopening of the economy. Loan growth for April accelerated to 10.1% y/y as the banking sector gained from the upswing in economic activity as well.

On the other hand, the Philippine economy continues to face headwinds as rising commodity costs persist. Crude oil was up 12% for the month of May, reaching $122 a barrel. In addition, there is a growing concern over global food shortage as declining supply of wheat, potatoes and flour is forcing food manufacturers and restaurants to cut production. Note that Philippines' May inflation reached 5.4%, the highest level recorded since 2019.

Outlook

We remain generally cautious on the Philippine equity market as the rising concerns over inflation and food shortage could bring volatility to the market. This could potentially also have a negative impact over consumer spending for the rest of the year. Meanwhile, the PSEI is trading already at attractive valuations, trading at only 13x price to forward earnings, a steep discount from our 5-Year average of 15.3x. Current market valuations are also at the lowest level in the past five years if we exclude the drop during the start of the pandemic in March 2020. We have a favorable view on financial and shopping mall segments, sectors that are quite resilient during this environment.
