Market Review

The Philippine Stock Equity index (PSEi) was up 3.81% in December. This brings the PSEi index to 6,450 level and provided a total return of around 1% for the year 2023. The rally in December was driven mostly by the improvement in the macroeconomic picture such as decelerating inflation while central banks paused hiking policy rates.

The macroeconomic environment of the Philippines further improved in December as seen in the inflation figure decelerating to 3.9% for the month, lower compared to 4.1% in November. Easing prices on housing, water, electricity, and other fuels helped bring inflation lower in December. If not for the significant increase in rice prices which was at around 19%, inflation could have been lower and well within in the middle of the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas inflation target of 2-4%.

Meanwhile, the BSP has kept policy interest stable at 6.5%. This is similar to the move of US Federal Reserve to keep their policy interest rates steady. As a result, market rates declined and providing legs to an equities rally in December.

There were a few updates from the government side as well during December such as the appointment of Frederic Go as Special Assistant to the President for Investment and Economic Affairs. He will serve as the Chairperson of Economic Development Group and identify key priority programs and projects of the government. On the other hand, President Marcos signed into law the Private Public Partnership (PPP) code of the Philippines and Internet Transaction Act. The PPP code aims to update the current framework used in the previous administrations.

Outlook

We continue to stay positive on Philippine equities driven by the improving macroeconomic backdrop of the country. The potential cut in policy interest rates could provide more upward momentum for the equity markets going into 2024. In part of this, the deceleration of inflation and declining pressure on consumers could boost consumption spending again.
