Market Review

Chinese equities posted gains in May on the back of easing trade tension and ongoing domestic policy stimulus. On the trade policy front, US and China have agreed upon a 90-day tariff truce in which China reduced tariffs on US goods to 10% (from 125%) and US reduced tariffs on Chinese goods to 30% (from 145%). In the meantime, Mainland China continued to develop bilateral relationship with other regions, including the completion of negotiations on an upgraded China-ASEAN Free Trade Area (CAFTA) agreement that expands corporation in digital/ green economy and supply chain connectivity. On the domestic policy front, the People's Bank of China (PBoC), National Financial Regulatory Administration (NFRA), and China Securities Regulatory Commission (CSRC) jointly announced policies to support the economy. Specifically, the PBoC reduced the one-year and five-year loan prime rate (LPR) by 10 basis points (bps), along with a broad-based 50 bps required reserve ratio (RRR) cut. Meanwhile, it has rolled out further policies targeting job stabilization, small-medium-enterprises (SME) financing support, and consumption stimulus.

For China A-shares, financials benefitted as three joint-stock banks received approvals to set up asset investment companies (AICs) to increase equity investments. Industrials moved higher on the back of strong exports trend as well as optimism over infrastructure and urban renewal policy support. Energy was supported by stabilizing oil and commodity prices.

Elsewhere, Hong Kong equities moved higher along with Chinese equities. The Hong Kong Stock Exchange launched a new listing channel targeting specialist tech/biotech firms, in order to attract high-growth companies and revitalize Hong Kong's initial public offering (IPO) market. On the economic front, Q1 2025 GDP (gross domestic product) growth (+3.1% year-on-year) and April exports growth (+14.7% year-on-year) both came in better than expected.

Outlook

We think Mainland China may roll out more targeted support policies to stimulate domestic consumptions. During the April politburo meeting, Mainland China has further reiterated plans to accelerate debt issuance, loosen monetary policy, and support labor amid trade tension. In an effort to support the private sector and sci-tech innovation, authorities have announced 23-point measures to support financing among SMEs, especially those specializing in niche sectors. It is also accelerating the sci-tech bond plan, aiming for USD40 billion in issuance, to fund innovation projects. To stimulate consumption, Shanghai region announced 32-point policies, including expanding auto and consumer goods trade-in programs, boosting service consumption, supporting new consumption areas, including IP collaboration.

In the medium to long term, as we anticipate more innovation in the humanoid robot industry and faster development in autonomous driving, we continue to favor technology, media, and telecommunications (TMT) and platform companies (with accelerated AI adoption), advanced manufacturing companies, edge AI beneficiaries (e.g., AI smartphones and AI PCs), and the robotic supply chain.
