Market Review

Chinese equities posted gains for the month on the back of further policy stimulus and improving China-U.S. relationships. To support the property sector, the People's Bank of China (PBoC) is reported to introduce a RMB1-trillion worth of low-cost funding via the pledged supplementary lending (PSL) programme for urban village renovation and affordable public housing. Chinese regulators are also reportedly developing a "whitelist" of 50 developers that can receive preferential funding support.

For China A-shares, energy led the performance amid rising coal prices. Healthcare also performed well with positive demand for obesity drugs and rising respiratory cases. On the other hand, materials relatively lagged as recent property market weakness weighed on cement and chemical names. On the policy front, the China Securities Regulatory Commission (CSRC) pledged to strengthen reforms to attract more mid- to long-term investments and encourage social security fund, insurance, and annuity funds to invest in A-shares.

Elsewhere, Hong Kong equities moved higher. Equities posted gains during the first half of the month, thanks to macro improvement and Chinese policy stimulus. However, part of the gains was reversed towards the end of the month by softer-than-expected guidance among selected blue-chip companies.

Outlook

Overall, stabilising consumptions, better-than-expected inventory destocking, and increased policy measures suggest potential bottoming of Mainland China's economy.

For policy tailwinds, Mainland China unveiled plan to guide state-owned-enterprises to deepen reform in safeguarding national security and domestic economy, as well as supporting strategic industries, such as integrated circuits, machine tools, electronic information, and others. The State Council also issued plans to further open up the telecom and financial services sectors in Beijing, including removing foreign stake limits on telecom businesses and allowing equal treatment to foreign investors, institutions, and cross-border financial service providers.

For innovations, Mainland China announced guidelines that aim to achieve mass production of humanoid robots by 2025 and to deeply integrate the industry into the real economy by 2027. Authorities also planned to replace all public transport vehicles with electric vehicles (EVs) in 15 trial cities, including Beijing, Shenzhen, and Chongqing. We reiterate our positive view on advanced manufacturing, automation, and technology localisation, particularly on EV, semiconductor, and software companies benefiting from localisation opportunities.

For consumption upgrade, local governments, including Guangdong, Hainan, and Liaoning, continued to give out vouchers in boosting consumption for automobiles and home appliances. In addition, the Ministry of Commerce commented that consumption growth has been resilient in the first nine months on the back of policy coordination and expressed confidence for further improvement in Q4 2023. We see service-led recovery continuing and favour service-led consumption sectors, such as hospitality and tourism.

Past performance of the Fund is not necessarily indicative of future performance. Yields are not guaranteed.
