Market Review

The US stock market remained volatile in March, finishing the month with a decline, as uncertainties about pending trade tariffs weighed on investors. Potentially higher prices and well-publicized federal government layoffs reignited recession fears, undermining consumer and corporate confidence. Amid this backdrop, investors became more risk averse, and value stocks significantly performed well. Within the broad-based Standard & Poor's (S&P) 500 Index, nearly all sectors posted declines, notably the information technology and consumer discretionary sectors. The energy sector, however, advanced amid hopes of more favorable US regulatory policies and expectations of global supply decreases due to US sanctions.

Outlook

Going forward, we expect the market to continue digesting the impact of tariffs, which could lead to more volatility and weaken investor sentiment near term. However, we remain encouraged about the market's longer-term prospects, given no evidence that economic growth is slowing, low levels of unemployment, solid consumer spending, and expectations for continued technology spending and corporate earnings growth.

The Fund mentioned in this document is specific to variable life insurance contracts and is not considered a mutual fund. Yields depend on interest and foreign exchange rate levels, both of which may fluctuate. Other factors that affect yield include changes in the credit standing of the issuers and changes in the value of the stocks and dividends received. Further, investments of the Fund may provide that their values be determined based on prices or yields of other securities, instruments or foreign currencies, and such provisions may result in negative fluctuations in the value of these investments and, in turn, the Fund's yields. Thus, the performance of the separate account(s) is not guaranteed and the value of the policy could be less than the capital invested. THE VARIABLE LIFE POLICYHOLDER SHALL BEAR ALL INVESTMENT RISKS. Past performance of the Fund is not necessarily indicative of future performance. Yields are not guaranteed.
