Market Review

US bonds posted mixed results in April. The continuing conflict in the Middle East and the related disruption in the energy sector contributed to rising commodity prices and heightened inflationary concerns. US economic data released during the month remained resilient, with robust reports on consumer spending and manufacturing activity, tempered by the highest year-on-year (YoY) inflation rate in nearly two years. The combination of solid economic news and inflationary pressures led the US Federal Reserve Board (Fed) to hold short-term interest rates steady at its policy meeting in April, though the decision was not unanimous.

For the month, bond yields edged higher across the board, putting downward pressure on bond prices. Nonetheless, most sectors of the bond market posted positive returns in April, led by high yield (HY) and investment grade (IG) corporate bonds, which benefited from continued strength in corporate fundamentals and profitability. In contrast, US Treasury securities declined during the month due to their greater interest-rate sensitivity.

Outlook

Preferred security new issuance has been strong, and we expect that to continue throughout 2026. Given recent geopolitical tensions, the investment team maintains its balanced approach of diversification among preferred security types and sectors, with an emphasis on defensive sectors. Defensive sectors such as regulated electric utilities and natural gas are key to managing through economic slowdowns and geopolitical events. Preferred securities still offer wider credit spreads compared to traditional fixed income, which creates healthy relative valuations for investors seeking yield without compromising credit quality.

The team continues to monitor current market risks such as inflation persistence, tariff-driven instability, and interest-rate volatility relating to shifting Fed expectations. With tight spreads across most of fixed income, the team continues to emphasize high-quality companies.

The Fund mentioned in this document is specific to variable life insurance contracts and is not considered a mutual fund. Other factors that affect yield include changes in the credit standing of the issuers and changes in the value of the stocks and dividends received. Further, investments of the Fund may provide that their values be determined based on prices or yields of other securities, instruments or foreign currencies, and such provisions may result in negative fluctuations in the value of these investments and, in turn, the Fund's yields. Thus, the performance of the separate account(s) is not guaranteed and the value of the policy could be less than the capital invested. THE VARIABLE LIFE POLICYHOLDER SHALL BEAR ALL INVESTMENT RISKS. Past performance of the Fund is not necessarily indicative of future performance. Yields are not guaranteed.
