Market Review

US bonds experienced a rally in February, achieving their best monthly return since July 2023. Throughout the month, bond yields fell, influenced by slowing economic growth, including weaker-than-expected job growth, a significant drop in retail sales, and the lowest consumer sentiment reading in 15 months. Additionally, worries about potential US tariffs fueled the bond market rally as attention shifted from inflationary pressures to concerns about economic growth. The only counteracting factor was an unexpected rise in the inflation rate, with the year-over-year inflation measure reaching a seven-month high.

For the month, bond yields generally trended lower, with intermediate- and long-term bond yields declining significantly. The decrease in short-term yields was less pronounced as the market grappled with how the US Federal Reserve (Fed) will navigate persistent inflation alongside weaker economic data. By sector, government agency residential mortgage-backed securities and US Treasury securities provided the most substantial returns, while high-yield corporate bonds and asset-backed securities lagged.

Outlook

Given the ongoing easing cycle by the US Fed, the market is currently assessing the extent and pace of rate cuts by the US Fed. Preferred securities have historically delivered strong returns during the US Fed easing periods, except during the Great Financial Crisis. As spreads are currently narrow across most fixed income, it is crucial to emphasize the importance of selecting appropriate securities within a capital structure to generate significant income and safeguard capital. We believe this can be accomplished by holding preferred securities, typically lower in the capital structure, and offering a greater spread. They also minimize permanent losses from defaults as they are issued by high-quality companies capable of withstanding challenging financial conditions. Additionally, the flexibility of the preferred security universe allows for allocation across various fixed income sectors and credit levels, making it easier to navigate softer economic environments. We prefer defensive sectors like electric utilities, as they have shown resilience during times of stress and have provided solid downside protection. In summary, there are still appealing opportunities to generate income within credit and spread sectors, with the potential for spread compression and limited risk of permanent capital impairment.

The Fund mentioned in this document is specific to variable life insurance contracts and is not considered a mutual fund.
