Market Review

US bonds advanced for the second consecutive month in September. Job growth in the US remained anemic, while the unemployment rate ticked up to its highest level in nearly four years. In response to the labor market weakness, the US Federal Reserve (Fed) lowered short-term interest rates during the month—the US Fed's first interest rate cut since December 2024—and indicated that more rate cuts were likely before the year-end. The US Fed took action despite persistently above-trend inflation, which rose to an eight-month high, and robust consumer spending. These economic and monetary policy developments occurred against the backdrop of a federal budget impasse, which eventually led to a government shutdown at month's end.

Bond yields were mixed but mostly lower in September. Short- and long-term bond yields fell for the month, while intermediate-term yields were flat to slightly higher. On a sector basis, investment-grade corporate bonds and residential mortgage-backed securities led the market's advance, while asset-backed securities lagged.

Outlook

With the shift in market focus from the US Fed and inflation to tariffs and their impact on growth, interest rate volatility has increased, and credit spreads have narrowed. The US Fed cut interest rates by 0.25% during its mid-September meeting, marking a shift from the tightening cycle of recent years, with the market pricing in two additional cuts in 2025. This move was primarily driven by recent signs of a softening labor market, while inflation remains above the US Fed's 2% target. Diversification across sectors like electric utilities, insurance, and telecom is essential for managing the economic slowdown headwinds.

We prefer defensive sectors, such as electric utilities, which have shown resilience during challenging periods and offered solid downside protection. This sector is mainly shielded from the current tariff war. Most of the preferred universe consists of financials, expected to experience little to no direct impact from tariffs, especially in the insurance sector. In conclusion, there are still attractive opportunities to generate income within credit and spread sectors, with potential for spread compression and limited risk of permanent capital loss.

The investment fund option for The Manufacturers Life Insurance Company's variable life insurance product is managed by Manulife Investment Management and Trust Corporation.

The Fund mentioned in this document is specific to variable life insurance contracts and is not considered a mutual fund. Yields depend on interest and foreign exchange rate levels, both of which may fluctuate. Other factors that affect yield include changes in the credit standing of the issuers and changes in the value of the stocks and dividends received. Further, investments of the Fund may provide that their values be determined based on prices or yields of other securities, instruments or foreign currencies, and such provisions may result in negative fluctuations in the value of these investments and, in turn, the Fund's yields. Thus, the performance of the separate account(s) is not guaranteed and the value of the policy could be less than the capital invested. THE VARIABLE LIFE POLICYHOLDER SHALL BEAR ALL INVESTMENT RISKS. Past performance of the Fund is not necessarily indicative of future performance. Yields are not guaranteed.
