Market Review

The Philippine market was down 1% for the month, closing at 7,122. For 2021, the PSEi had a total return of 1.6%. Throughout the year the economy tried to reopen but was hampered by COVID-related challenges. Although below than initial expectations, overall corporates still saw a stark improvement in earnings in 2021.

Mobility has significantly improved in December in light of the low COVID-19 daily cases during the period. This brought a significant rise in foot traffic in retail areas such as shopping malls and restaurants, implying an improvement in consumer spending. However, the steady increase in COVID-19 cases in the latter parts of December raised concerns on a potential lockdown in Metro Manila. This has caused the weakness in the equity markets in the last week of December.

Macroeconomic data continues to support further improvement in the economy. Inflation has decelerated to around 3.6% in December on easing food prices. Earlier in the year inflation was a concern as it was around 5% due to high food prices. Meanwhile, industry commercial loans continued to improve throughout the year, reaching 4% YoY as of November from being down earlier in the year. Improvement in loan activity was driven mostly due by commercial activity as corporates ramp up capital expenditure to expand businesses in 2021.

Outlook

We remain optimistic that the economy will further reopen in 2022 despite the recent surge in COVID-19 cases due to Omicron variant. The availability of COVID-19 vaccines should be able to help reduce the impact of COVID-19 to the economy. Meanwhile, the upcoming elections and subsequent campaign spending could potentially provide a boost in corporate earnings. However, this could also bring volatility as a significant change in the political environment could bring into question previous government policies made by the current administration.
