Market Review

The Philippine market lost ground in November, following the conclusion of the US presidential elections and the third-quarter earnings reporting season for local companies. The benchmark Philippine Stock Exchange Index (PSEi) declined by 7.26% for the month, putting its year-to-date performance at 5.19%. In US dollar terms, however, the PSEi is marginally lower for the year at 0.63%, as the Philippine peso reached a low of 59.004 PHP/USD during the month.

Third-quarter GDP surprised negatively as output grew by 5.2% for the period, with weather disturbances crimping agriculture and construction activity. Domestic demand remained resilient, while encouraging signs in household consumption helped offset any further slowdown as it quickened again after a two-quarter slowdown. Meanwhile, November inflation slightly accelerated to 2.5%, in line with market expectations.

Market sentiment was also negatively affected by third-quarter earnings results, which showed some weakness. The property sector continued to be affected by concerns over residential sales weakness and the exit of Philippine offshore gaming operators (POGOs), while revenues of consumer discretionary and staples names remained impacted by down trading as prices remained relatively high.

Outlook

The market's decline in November has increased the attractiveness of Philippine shares. Buying opportunities are emerging as investors prepare for 2025. Despite pressures on the local currency, manageable price pressures are likely to keep the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas on track to deliver additional rate cuts in 2025, which may help offset offshore volatility as US trade and economic policies take front and center in 1Q2025 when Donald Trump begins his second presidential term.

The Fund mentioned in this document is specific to variable life insurance contracts and is not considered a mutual fund.
